Book 2: Marriages

Introduction

Book Two of Springfield marriages contains 285 pages measuring approximately 16 by 6½ inches. The volume was restored in 1993 and is presently in good condition. This book includes marriage intentions and returns of marriage from justices of the peace and local ministers. Because of the various forms in which the returns were made, the format of this volume varies widely. The inside title page incorrectly states that the record ends on 17 November 1804.

This document was filmed by the Genealogical Society of Utah in 1958. A microfilm copy is available through the Family History Library in Salt Lake City (FHL film no. 185,416).

ADDENDUM

The following is an exerpt from a letter written by Dr. Scott, nephew of Joseph[5] Younglove. The letter is in the posession of Edward[10] R. Younglove, 1988.

Joseph Younglove, the eldest son of Isaiah was born October 11, 1741 in Bound Brook, New Jersey. Was married to Azubah Skinner December 2, 1762. Moved to Cambridge with his father in April 1772 and lived there as a farmer the remainder of his life. He died in 1812 and was buried by the side of his father.

He had five children, two sons, Aaron J., Cornelius and three daughters, Harriet[20], Elizabeth, and Polly.

He was in no battle in the Revolutionary War, but was useful in collecting information. He never held any office higher than Justice of The Peace, but was a useful member of society.

Uncle Jo, as he was usually called, was a small spare man with a small head, a long nose, and a large mouth, but he was as active as a squirrel and so kind and affectionate that he was universally loved. He was always trying to do some good and generally succeeded. He was a small farmer, but kept himself independent. He never aimed at style in anything, but sought comfort. It did one's heart good to visit him as I have often done. To be welcomed by his joyous countenance and the smiles of his dear good wife; to be treated with the dainties which grow upon a farm, to see one's horse so well cared for and one's self so petted would make one feel happy in spite of yourself.

At middle age he professed religion, but often before that he kept his character free from reproach. He had the reputation of being a wise man and an honest one.

Springfield Cemetery Lot Books

Located in Cemetery Office
171 Maple Street, Springfield

This section includes information from the lot diagrams in the Springfield Cemetery Lot Books. Generally, only those persons without extant gravestones who died before 1850 are included in this section. In some cases, the lot diagrams include a list of names of those found on gravestones within the lot. In such situations, all names and dates were transcribed if at least one death occurred prior to 1850. Many lot diagrams include no names other than the lot owners. Of those diagrams that have names attached to individual burial plots, only a fraction include death dates.

The old Methodist Burying Ground, which was absorbed by the Springfield Cemetery in 1858, has a separate lot book with its own system of lot numbers. Information from the Methodist Burying Ground diagrams is placed after the main series. Editorial notes are inserted between square brackets and in footnotes.

In this section, the word "lot" is used to describe the entire parcel of ground in possession of the original owner or owners. Each lot is assigned its own unique number by the cemetery. "Plot" is used to describe the individual burial place of a person interred within a lot. Some lots are very large and include many burial plots.
